Lifewire uses cookies to provide you with a great user experience. By using Lifewire, you accept our use of cookies. On iPhone: Open settings > messages > enable sending read receipts. On Android: Settings > chat features, text messages, or conversations, and turn on the read receipt options you want. In WhatsApp: Settings > Account > Privacy > Read Receipts. Here's how to see if someone has read your text on Android and iOS smartphones or in messenger and WhatsApp instant messaging apps. This information includes Android messages, the Messages app for iOS, and WhatsApp and Messenger instant messaging apps. On iPhone, read receipts are the only way to tell if someone has read the text sent from Messages, the default messaging app for iOS. If you and your recipient are using Apple iMessage and have activated read receipts, you'll see the word Read below the last message to the recipient along with the time it takes to read the message. Here's how to turn read receipts on or off in Messages for iOS: Read receipts only work if you and the Recipient turn iMessage on in your message settings. Read receipts don't work if you're using an SMS message or the recipient isn't using an iOS device. Open the settings. Tap Messages (green icon with white text balloon). Enable sending read receipts. Others are notified when reading their messages. If the recipient has also enabled read receipts, you'll see Read below the message as it reads. A similar situation applies to Android phones. The Android Messages app supports read receipts, but the operator must also support this feature. The recipient must have read receipts activated to verify that they read your message. Here's how to enable read receipts on Android phones: The following tips should apply no matter who made your Android phone: Samsung, Google, Huawei, Xiaomi, etc. However, there may be slight differences depending on the Android version. In the text messaging app, open Settings. If you don't see Settings, tap the three vertical dots or lines at the top of the screen. Go to chat, text messages, or conversations. If this option isn't on the first page that appears, tap More settings. Turn the Read Receipts switch on (or off), send read receipts, or request confirmation, depending on your phone and what you want to do. Enable delivery receipts to find out if a text message has been delivered to the recipient. (This does not indicate whether the message has been read.) On newer phones, open the Messages app and go to Settings > Advanced > Download SMS delivery reports. WhatsApp uses built-in read receipts as check marks next to messages. One gray check mark indicates that the message has been sent, two gray check marks indicate that the message has been delivered, and two blue check marks indicate that the message has been read. If you don't want senders to know if you're reading their messages, here's how to turn off read receipts in WhatsApp: In WhatsApp, read receipts are two-way bidirectional. If you turn off read receipts to prevent others from knowing their messages, you won't know when they're reading yours. Open WhatsApp and tap Settings (gear icon) in the lower right corner. Tap Account. Tap Privacy. Turn off the Read receipts switch to prevent the other person from knowing after reading the message. Close the settings. Read receipts are disabled and two blue check marks are not displayed in messages sent or read. You can't turn off read receipts in group messages on WhatsApp. If you're looking for specific information about WhatsApp messages sent, here's how to view the message details. Open WhatsApp and tap chat. Swipe left on the message to open the Message Information screen. You can also tap and hold the message and select About. If read receipts are not disabled, you'll see the exact delivery and read time of the message. Messenger has no read receipts. Instead, it displays icons that reveal when a message is sent, when it is delivered, and when it is read. When the message is sent, you'll briefly see a blue circle. Once sent, you'll see a blue circle with a check mark. Once delivered, you'll see a filled blue circle. Finally, when you read it, you'll see a small version of the recipient's profile picture below the message. To read a message in Messenger without telling the sender that you've read it, read it on the notification screen instead of opening the message. Thank you for letting us know! Tell us why! iStock/jacob-wackerhausenDo you've gone on two dates or been in a relationship for a year, ending your romance through the blue bubble is not only sticky, but very hurtful and disrespectful. That's why online dating expert Julia Spira suggests we have the extra mile we need and pick up the phone. I saw someone pen paragraphs of John's dear letter through the text. If you've been close enough to be naked with someone and talk about the future at some point, kindly call or meet in person, he says. Sometimes there is only a misunderstanding that can prevent disintegration. Learn annoying sms habits you probably have that you should give up now. iStock/hoozoneTimes gathering enough courage to go on a first date (or even a third) is a feat in itself. But if you feel a desire to bail, whether you've met someone more interesting, or just feel like ghosting, pick up the phone, says Spira. If someone is excited about the date and you say, I have to cancel, sorry, it sends a message that has moved you right to the cuter option. If you do not know that you are going to lick, then you can say: Something invented, but I really would like to lick. How is Tuesday or Saturday? In this way, they know that they have not yet been removed. Sometimes life gets in the way, but showing that you want to move a relationship forward is a digital act of good faith. Find out when texting is actually a better option. iStock/ridofranzOd loss your job to lose a loved one, bad news is always hard to convey. But when you are going to tell someone something that can shake their reality or make them very upset, it is important to prepare them as much as possible, and the text message does not provide seriousness in an effective way. The other person doesn't see your nonverbal signals, and your tone can be seen as different from how you feel, explains licensed marriage and family therapist Courtney Getter. Also, you don't know what the other person is doing at this point, they may not be able or in a situation to take the bad news. Of course, you don't want to get bad news right before a big meeting, test, or event. Better plan: Ask the person for a moment to meet and note that this is urgent. Suggest a private or semi-private location without distraction. If a face-to-face meeting is not possible, take the time to talk on the phone when the conversation can be private and distracting. Studio WAYHOME / Shutterstock On the other side of the coin, you'll want to avoid sharing life-changing, super exciting good news over text, too. Of course, small victories, such as a good score or a successful presentation of the work, are usually fine to share using text. But - call us old-fashioned- if you've just got engaged, are expecting a baby, or got so out of the job or college of your dreams, it's messages that should be shared over the phone if not in person! Of course, you can not call every person in your life, but if you care enough to reach out to someone at all to tell them, you should reach out in a more personal way than the text. Watch out for these warning signs you are addicted to your mobile phone. iStock/martin-dmWhile you can trust people in your life to keep and keep your secrets, hackers don't have the same integrity. Therefore, sending anything that is personal, sensitive, or financial through text is a great no-no. And that refers to the information or the person you're texting. You don't know who else can see this information, and it can never be completely removed or removed from cyberspace, says Ceter. Before sending a private message or photo via text message or email, ask yourself about the consequences of other people but the recipient seeing the information. If you come up with at least one negative consequence, consider sending this information. iStock/georgievicOur teenager took the car without asking—again. Your partner drinks a little too much. Your coworker didn't meet their deadlines. When you have serious concerns, it is better to speak directly and not write. We never have an important, in-depth conversation through text because of the sound - we are too easily misunderstood, and take a very good chance of making the problem worse than it was in the first place, Nikki Martinez, PsyD. iStock/blackredYour pals posted an Instagram photo of the restaurant you want to try, and they didn't invite you. Or your ex suddenly suddenly new partner as soon as they break up. Whenever you see something on the Internet that immediately arouses anger, frustration or sadness in you, it is then that you should put down your phone and not pick it up. Upset texting is a way to immediately emote your feelings without having to deal with the other person's reactions, says relationship expert and author Dawn Michael, PhD. You don't open a conversation, but you just throw your upset feelings at another person, and they can't be in place to get those feelings. Also, if you're really overwrought, it's a good idea to take a walk or spend a few minutes calming down before texting. Otherwise, you'll send a message that you may regret and you can never receive it. Learn that some photos should never be posted on social media. iStock/lladendronJust like a lawyer or hiring manager is very, very particular about what they put in writing, so should you be careful about what you write over text. Don't forget that messages can always be screenshots and shared with others in your circle, and then you never know who can see them. Whatever you send, you should be able to stand by it. Anything you don't want someone else to see can be shown in the text, and that's a big problem, says Dr. Michael. The text intended for your girlfriend is now posted on Facebook or can be used as a weapon against you. Even if you send a message to a specific person, the second one you hit send is out of your hands. Never send something so secretive or horrible that if you get out in trouble, or come back to bite you in the ass, says Dr. Michael. It's an illusion that your text message is really private. Additionally, make sure you're following those 10 group text label policies everyone should know. fizkes/ShutterstockYou probably know (or at least hopefully you should know) that bashing a job or boss on social media is a great no-no. But while texting may seem like a more private space to air work-related complaints, it's worth thinking twice before you do it, especially if the recipient is a co-worker. Even if you are sure that your co-worker has the same opinion as you, whacking a job or other co-worker to them is still a risky move and a good way to burn bridges. That doesn't mean you can never express your frustration when your work is less than hunky dory. But it is better to do it in a situation where you can assess someone's reaction, how to raise it and in a less constant environment than cyberspace. iStock/portishead1Adding the last word with text may seem really critical in the heat of the moment, but when you come back a few hours later, you may regret it. And if you are fighting with your partner, it can easily aggravate the situation. Tell your partner that you want to continue the discussion when you return to or schedule a meeting and conversation in person. Misunderstandings can occur in a text message, leaving you at a disadvantage because you can't read the clues on your face or understand the intentions behind the words, says psychotherapist and relationship expert Sarah Mandel, LCSW. Looking at your partner's face and hearing their tone of voice releases brain well-being hormones that produce a more relaxed condition in the body, helping you kiss and make up. Here are some etiquette policies everyone should follow when sending TEXT messages to their partner. iStock/diego_cervoYou've seen memes before and nodded in agreement. What happens to people who don't respond to text messages?! Before you place all the blame on them, consider your own guilt in sending long, continuous streams of text messages without waiting for the other person to respond. It's not just a bad phone label, but if you're upset, it's worth calling. You can wait for a response from someone, but give them a break and don't blow up their phone with excessive texts to get their attention, says Mandel. They can be busy or in an area where there is no Wi-Fi, so messages do not pass. And by over-texting, you'll just tease them and appear desperate. If you don't hear from someone, call them or send them an email. Then, find out the rules of the mobile phone label you should follow, but they are not.
